It's a crying shame to me that the Jewish people who have properly invested in learning the lessons of the Holocaust are now considered traitors or sub-humans in their own community because they dare to criticise the acts of other humans who happen to be Jewish.

By identifying the othering and dehumanisation that's so well taught by places like the Holocaust Museum and speaking out against the Israeli governments actions they're considered persona-non-grata by their own peers. It's fucking tragic.

I'll never forget the video where a holocaust survivor was called a "traitor Jew" because he was putting forward the language parallels he'd witnessed from the Nazis with the rhetoric of the Israeli government.

And of course this isn't limited to Jewish people - it seems clear that the majority of British politicians have learnt absolutely nothing from the Holocaust from a human perspective.

I'm very interested to hear what lessons you think Jews should have learnt from the holocaust.
